A new approach to supported living

Manor Grange is a supported living service designed for young adults with learning disabilities and autistic people, including those with complex needs, behaviours of distress or mental health challenges, as they move into adulthood.

It offers a safe, welcoming and supportive environment where people can build confidence, learn new skills and grow their independence at their own pace, while knowing support is always there when needed.

We support young people aged 18+ who may be moving on from family homes, education or other supported settings. Some people may need support to feel safe and achieve positive outcomes, while also having the potential to become more independent over time.

Manor Grange is especially suited to individuals who are ready for greater independence but would still benefit from the reassurance of tailored support. It is ideal for those who want a home of their own, while having access to a dedicated support team and a community of peers nearby.

Building independence, together

At Manor Grange, independence is part of everyday life. We encourage people to learn through real-life experiences, build confidence and develop skills that matter to them. With tailored 1:1 or 2:1 support available, alongside shared support when needed, individuals can develop everyday living and community skills at a pace that is right for them.

Every support plan is tailored to the individual, focusing on the goals, routines and activities that matter most to them. With in-house PBS expertise, autism-informed support and PROACT-SCIPr-UK-trained colleagues, we help people build confidence, increase their independence and achieve meaningful outcomes, with regular reviews to ensure support continues to meet their changing needs.

This approach gives people the space to make their own choices and build confidence, with tailored support to develop everyday life skills, access education, employment and community opportunities. As independence grows, support can evolve alongside the individual.

Supporting journeys into adulthood

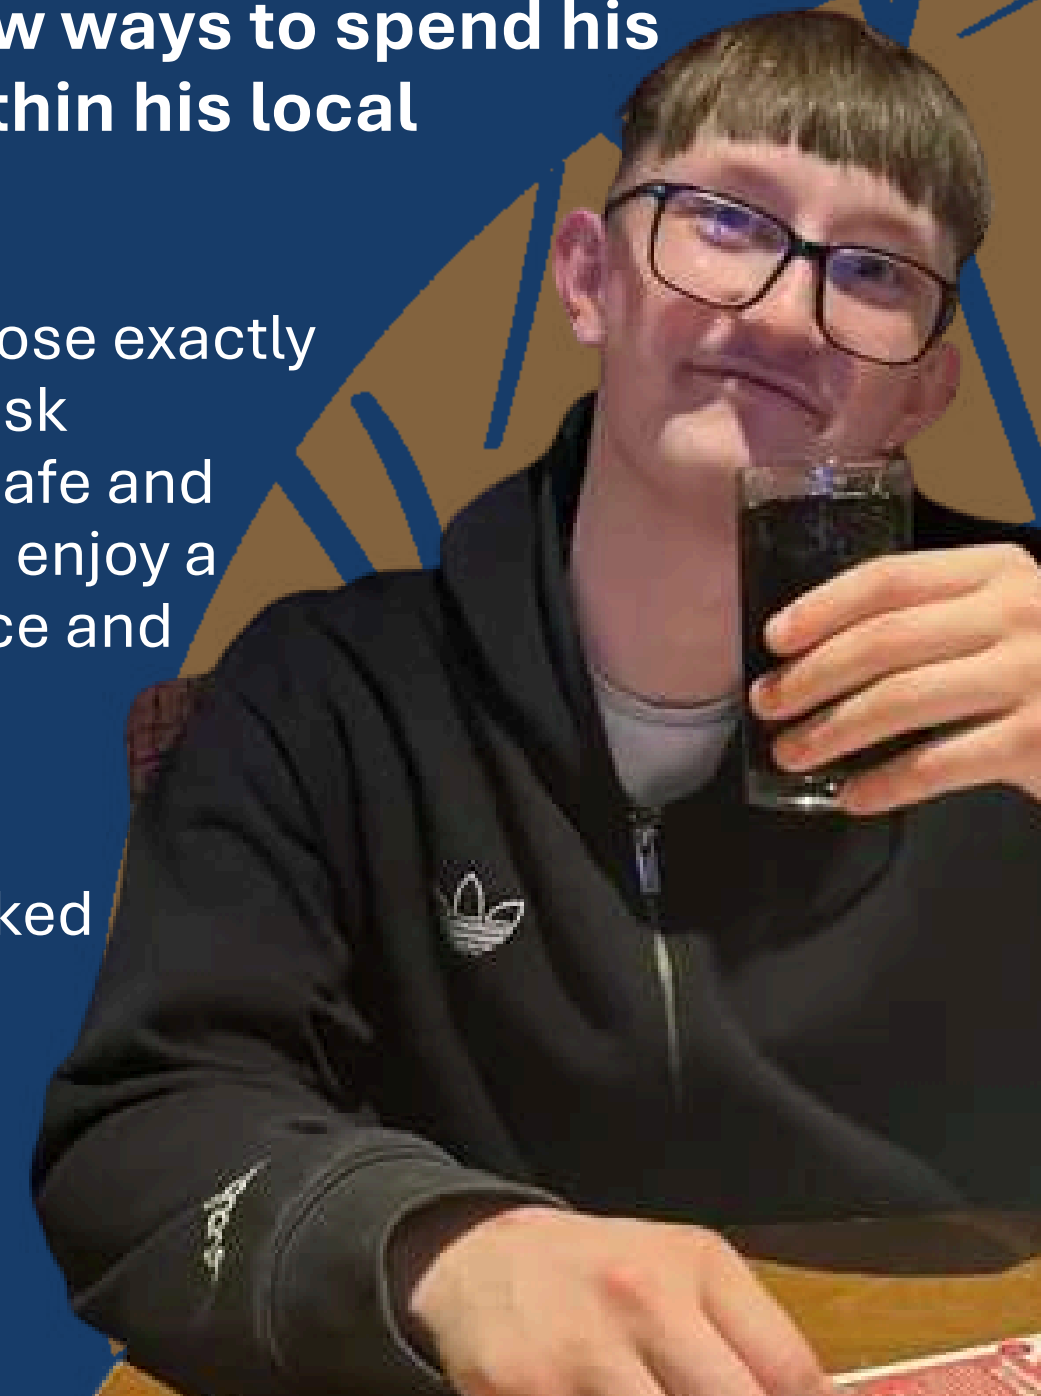

We know moving into adult support is a big step. We work closely with families, carers and professionals to make sure each transition is well planned, supported and centred around the individual.

Our focus is always on what matters to each person. We support people to build confidence, develop life skills and form meaningful relationships, helping them become more independent and work towards their goals for the future.

Sunny lives in a Supported Living service and has been focusing on building a life that reflects his interests and goals. Recently, he has been developing his confidence, exploring new ways to spend his time and creating meaningful connections within his local community.

He recently led the planning for an evening out and chose exactly how he wanted to spend his time. He co-produced a risk assessment with staff, identifying what activities felt safe and meaningful for him. He decided to walk to a local pub, enjoy a drink, and play pool - showing increasing independence and comfort in his community.

He then chose to go to the cinema. With supportive planning from the staff, Sunny enjoyed the trip and talked openly about how having evening activities gives him something to look forward to. He also shared that spending more time in local social settings will help him continue to meet new people.
